TWO more Covid-19 cases were this morning reported at Namibia's leading tertiary institutions, the University of Namibia (Unam) and the Namibia University of Science and Technology (Nust).

In a statement, Nust Acting Vice Chancellor, Andrew Niikondo, said that a positive case was recorded at the university's Communication department, where a student tested positive.

The student, according to Niikondo, got his results on Sunday.

He shares an office with a colleague who tested positive for the virus last week Friday.

Niikondo said that the two are both currently in quarantine.

Meanwhile, the University also reports that there is another presumptive case involving a staff member who was in close contact with a relative who tested positive for the coronavirus on Saturday.

The results are yet to be released.

Unam today also announced the temporary closure of the administration building, citing decontamination after one of the staff members tested positive.

The building will only reopen on Thursday, said the Public relations team.

Students have been advised to make their payments via the bank or make transfers.
