PREFACE
by the Director-General of UNESCO

"Utazi agakura abaga umutavu - He who ignores the future refuses to help childhood "
(Kirundi proverb)

Children are the most vulnerable group in human society. They require constant care and education in their early years to ensure their survival and development. Research demonstrates that, of all age groups, children are most affected by adverse conditions and that delay in any one dimension of the child's development influences adversely the whole child. Thus, nutritional, physical, psycho-social or cognitive deficits incurred by children in the crucial early years are interactive and cumulative to a much greater extent than ever again in the life cycle. Such research has focused attention on the need to provide good quality, integrated care during the first years of life.

Yet, nations are slow to invest in children, who are in fact the promise of their future. Recently released U.S. Census Bureau figures show that children now make up 40% of America's poor. Likewise, the alarming economic decline of Sub-Saharan Africa and its rapid population growth indicate that the situation of children in most African countries is one of high risk.

International reaction to the situation, though insufficient at the level of funding from richer countries, has been swift and energetic. Three major international events in favour of children have marked the last three years: the ratification by the United Nations of the Convention on the Rights of the Child in 1989, the Jomtien World Conference on Education for All in 1990, followed in September of the same year by the World Summit for Children. Goals for the year 2000 proclaimed during these assemblies included expansion of early childhood development activities, universal access to basic education and completion of primary education by at least 80% of primary school age children.

At the level of the funding agencies, both the World Bank and the United Nations Development Fund (UNDP) have greatly increased their funding for human resources development and basic education in the developing world. The specialised agencies such as the World Health Organization (WHO) and UNICEF have also answered the call to invest urgently in childhood care and education. UNICEF, in particular, has greatly increased its educational personnel at national level with the intention of contributing significantly to basic education, especially for girls, and has created a central unit at headquarters in New York to co-ordinate educational activities, including early child development. Similarly, the major international NGOs in the field of child care and education, such as the Bernard van Leer Foundation and Save The Children, continue to promote child welfare and education through a multitude of cooperative ventures with government and local NGOs. Their work has been exemplary in its concentration on the integral development of the child, its grass-roots contacts, its promotion of local expertise and the attention paid to community development and social change, linked to continuous and appropriate backstopping.

UNESCO, too, recognizing that good quality early childhood development programs have a positive and permanent influence on later schooling achievement and are a major entry point for the education of women, established in November 1989 a special project: The Young Child and the Family Environment. The Project participates in United Nations or other international initiatives in favour of children and families; encourages governments to integrate early childhood programmes in their long-term social and economic planning; gives technical aid and assistance in the design and planning of innovative, community-based, integrated programmes in early childhood development; acts as a clearing house for information and exchange by promoting the use of existing knowledge on the development of the young child and its family environment and by disseminating information on successful policies, programmes and activities.

The publication of the present Directory, timed to coincide with the African Child International Conference convened by the Organization of African Unity and UNICEF, is part of UNESCO's contribution to the Conference. We are pleased to show the splendid work being accomplished for children in Africa by organizations from all parts of the world, but particularly by dedicated African men and women. We trust that the information made available in the Directory will facilitate contacts among institutions and individuals working in the field of the young child and the family environment and convince them of the convergence of their interests and the need for concerted efforts to ensure a fair start for children.

Overview of the Directory

John Bennett

The Young Child and the Family Environment Project

The Young Child and the Family Environment (YCFE) Project, proposed by the Director General, was approved by the Executive Board and adopted at the 25th session of the General Conference of Unesco in November 1989. Within Unesco, the Project is intersectoral, that is, one of its chief functions is to coordinate activities undertaken by the Organization in favour of young children and their families. It hopes to enhance interagency cooperation with UNICEF, UNFPA, WHO, UNHCR, relevant NGOs, and private funding agencies to ensure the greatest complementarity and avoid duplication of efforts. All disciplines within UNESCO's mandate are called to contribute to its implementation over the next six years.

Definitions

By young child is meant children during their preschool period, that is, children between the ages of 0 and 6 years. During that period of his life, every child needs the following basic services:

- Health care: primary health care for pregnant and nursing mothers health education and disease control.
- Safe, clean water supplies: safe clean water for drinking, cooking and bathing to prevent the spread of diseases caused by lack of sanitation.
- Nutrition: enough food to prevent malnutrition and to aid physical and mental growth.
- Education: early childhood education, primary, secondary and out-of-school learning provide literacy and enrich children's learning experiences.
- Welfare services: half and full-day early childhood centres, youth organizations, parent-teachers' associations, self-help and income-generating projects will all improve community, family and children's centres programmes.

To provide these services and create an appropriate environment for the healthy development of children, institutions and governments involved in YCFE activities have come to realize that their actions need to involve not only children but also parents, families and communities. In addition, trained personnel and adequate facilities are needed to implement services adequately and place them on a sustainable basis.

By family environment is meant both the family and the community. Family is understood in its widest sense - in all its configurations: traditional, extended, nuclear and single-parent. It is any group or person "who takes care of and cares for a child during a lifetime" (Prof. Uri Bronfenbrenner). The Project has adopted the working definition of the family formulated by the United Nations Committee on Civil and Political Rights, namely, "a group of persons ... regarded as a family under the legislation and practice of a State". The word "environment" is added in order to broaden the concept beyond its simple legal definition and thereby to include not only the broad family grouping but also the community and society in which both child and family have their roots. The term "family environment" thus illustrates that YCFE actions take into account the physical, intellectual, socio-cultural and economic aspects of the environment the child lives in; thus involving aspects that not only concern the child himself, but also his immediate family and his community. It also reflects some of the underlying principles, including:

- gradual improvement in the quality of life of all members of the community: the child, the parents and the family.
- improvement of the ability of individuals, families and communities to solve their problems by using locally available resources and identifying external factors which can contribute to their solution.

-preparing children, parents, families to become active participants in the process of community development. As such, all actions taken are beneficial not only to those directly involved in programmes, but also to all members of the community.

Goals and Objectives

The overall objective of the Project is to safeguard and promote the development of children at an age that is crucial for their physical, mental and emotional development and decisive for their learning abilities and integration in the educational process. In principle, therefore, any theme affecting young children and the family in any social context throughout the world can be considered. However, given the dramatic needs of children in deprived situations, Project activities concentrate on children at risk. It is becoming increasingly clear that risk situations are widespread, even in industrialized countries, and are destined to increase in a world where countries are no longer able to meet the basic health and learning needs of their children and families.

Within this context, the Project intervenes at different levels:

- at the interagency level, by participating in United Nations or other international initiatives in favour of children and families;
- at the intergovernmental level, by encouraging governments to integrate early childhood programmes in their long-term social and economic planning;
- through technical aid and assistance in the design, development and implementation of innovative, community-based, integrated programmes in early childhood development; as well as contributing to the improvement of the child development skills of parents and caregivers by encouraging child care information and education services, and community-based family support programmes;
- by acting as a clearing house for information and exchange by promoting the use of existing knowledge on the development of the young child and its family environment and by disseminating information on successful policies, programmes and activities.

In order to guide the Project, UNESCO's Director-General appointed in May 1990 a Scientific Advisory Group (SAG), comprised of eminent scholars, practitioners and representatives of partner agencies and foundations who have distinguished themselves in early childhood care, development and education. The SAG advises the Project on its overall orientations, evaluates its progress, and helps make it visible to potential funders, policy and decision-makers in countries around the world. Throughout the year, close contacts are maintained with all Group members to assure a steady cross-flow of information.

Information/Documentation Activities

In line with the Project's directive to enhance the exchange of information on early childhood the Project has initiated a series of YCFE information/documentation activities. These aim to:

- create opportunities for institutions and individuals to learn about each other's needs, hopes and agendas, and build up active relationships to benefit the well-being of young children and their families.
- facilitate contacts among institutions and individuals working in the field of the young child and the family environment and convince them of the convergence of their interests and the need for concerted efforts to ensure a fair start for children.
- provide documentation on early childhood institutions and circulate it to interested institutions, groups and individuals to assist them in their work.
- meet the needs of individuals seeking contacts within the YCFE field: scholars, scientists or students seeking colleagues elsewhere, those engaged in cross-cultural research and experimental projects, organizations looking for external resources.

In brief, YCFE information/documentation activities attempt to offer a solution to the complex problem of information exchange on early childhood issues.

The YCFE Data Bases

In an effort to foster an Interchild Network and facilitate inter-institutional collaboration, the Project set up a YCFE International Data Base in 1990. Information for the Data Base was compiled through a questionnaire survey. The Data Base contains information on a variety of institutions involved in early childhood care, development and education. The institution profiles are both general (as to the institution's name, address, number of staff, type of institution) and specific (regarding the major foci of activities, types of activities, including grant-making and information activities, and regions of activity).

As an extension of the YCFE International Data Base and to provide further information about YCFE institutions in specific geographical regions, a YCFE Regional Data Base was established in 1991. The first region to be documented is Sub-Saharan Africa, as outlined in the present volume. The YCFE Regional Data Bases will focus on activities aimed at the Young Child, the Family and the Community. The institution profiles are both general (as to the institution's name, address, contact person) and specific (regarding the types of activities, their focus and their target groups, as well as funding sources, partnership links and information activities).

A further extension to the International Data Base is planned for 1993. The YCFE Unit at UNESCO is collecting information worldwide with the intention of creating condensed profiles of the state of early childhood care and education for each country.

The YCFE Directories

Information contained in the YCFE International Data Base was used to publish in 1991 the first edition of the International Directory on the Young Child and the Family Environment. The Directory describes the major activities of 670 institutions in 116 countries, both in their home country and in other countries, along with pertinent data on their information activities. The Directory is being constantly updated and a second edition will be published in 1994.

In addition to the International Directory, a series of Regional Directories will be published. These Regional Directories will give more detailed information on regional structures and help identify critical YCFE and population issues specific to the chosen regions. They will also provide details on institutions, funding and networking information, communication and educational programmes in favour of the young child and the family. The first in this series is the current volume focusing on Sub-Saharan Africa.

The Directory of Early Childhood Care and Education Organizations in Sub-Saharan Africa

The Directory of Early Childhood Care and Education Organizations in Sub-Saharan Africa is based on a survey of 241 organizations, representing a wide range of institutions, both non-governmental and governmental, involved in early childhood care, development and education. It aims to be an important information source for professionals working with and for children, and to encourage and facilitate communication and information sharing between institutions and individuals active in improving the situation of children worldwide. This publication seeks to give a just insight into the national, regional and international contributions to early childhood care and education activities in Sub-Saharan Africa.

Contents

The Directory describes the major activities of 241 organizations based in 40 Sub-Saharan countries involved in early childhood care, development and education, along with pertinent data on their Young Child, Family and Community programmes and their information activities. Indexes are included to facilitate information retrieval.

Methodology

The information presented in the Directory was compiled through a questionnaire survey sent to 660 organizations in Sub-Saharan Africa. This survey, which covered a period of approximately eight months, was complemented by information from other relevant sources.

Update

Although the data contained in this Directory has been repeatedly checked, errors and omissions may still exist. All modifications and additions should be entered on the questionnaire included in the volume and returned to the address given below. A sample questionnaire is included to encourage users to complement and update the information provided, and to offer those organisations which are not included the chance to be considered for future editions. An evaluation form is also included to help improve future editions of the Directory. Users are invited to complete this form and return it to the address provided.

Sections of the Directory

Articles

Two articles offer an overview of the situation of children in Sub-Saharan Africa and of the African family environment in general, and provide an analysis of the information collected in this Directory.

The article, Childhood in Sub-Saharan Africa: challenges and opportunities, provides an insight into the current situation of children on the African continent. Bernard Combes, who researched and compiled the Directory, takes a look at the changing conditions facing children and their family environment in Africa.

The article, Early childhood care and education in Sub-Saharan Africa: survey findings by Joanne Furman Combes, offers an analysis of the information obtained from the survey providing relevant statistics concerning early childhood activities in Sub-Saharan Africa.

Statistical Tables

Before presenting the different organizations in each country, statistical tables give an overview of the basic social and economic statistics available by country, which directly concern the 0-5 age group and their families. This information was drawn from the 1990 Statistical Wall Chart on Children prepared jointly by the United Nations, UNICEF, UNESCO and WHO.

The headings of categories used in the Wall Chart were retained for this publication:

Children under 5: Total number of children who are not yet 5 years old.

Infant Mortality Rate: Number of infant deaths under one year of age per 1000 live births.

Children under 5 underweight: Moderately and severely underweight children.

School enrolment ratio: Total number of enrolled children aged 6 to 11 as a percentage of the total population aged 6 to 11.

Female illiteracy: Percentage of the female population aged 15 and over who cannot read and write.

Total Fertility Rate: Total number of children who would be borne by a woman, if she were to live to the end of her child-bearing years, conforming to the existing fertility pattern of the country.

Current GNP per capita $US, 1988: Estimated at current market prices in US dollars.

Access to local health care: Coverage by local health care within one hour's walk travel.

The following symbols are used in the tables:

.. Data not available

a/ Data for the following countries are for 1975-1979: Haiti, Jamaica, St. Lucia, Nepal, Singapore, Yemen Arab Republic. In addition, all data for age 0-59 months, with the following exceptions: 3-36 months - Tunisia, Guatemala, Trinidad & Tobago, Colombia, Sri Lanka, Thailand; 0-36 months - Morocco, Togo; 0-71 months - Chile, Peru, Uruguay, Singapore; 3-59 months - Swaziland, Haiti, Yemen Arab Republic; 3-35 months - Egypt; 0-23 months - Madagascar, Deminica; 6-59 months - Malawi; 6-36 months - Senegal, Deminican Republic; 0-60 months - Uganda; 3-60 months - Zimbabwe; 6-71 months - Bangladesh; 12-59 months - India; 0-65 months - Democratic Yemen

Profiles

The information included in the profiles presents the activities, both in their home country and in other countries, of each organization. The profiles are arranged alphabetically by country and by the official name of the organization. A reference code assigned to each profile is listed above the official name. This code is used in the indexes to refer to the organisation, rather than the page number on which the profile is found.

Each profile contains five types of information about the organization: a) identification and contact fields; b) the aims, type and countries of actions of the organisation; c) information concerning the co-operation/partnership activities of the organization; d) the major activities within the Young Child, Family and Community programmes of each organisation; e) the services and information activities offered by each organisation.

Identification fields

Practical information on each organization is provided, including the official name and translation; acronym when it exists; address; telephone, telex, cable and telefax numbers; and contact name.

General information fields

The major aims of the organization are listed, along with the type of actions it undertakes and the countries in which it is active. The foundation date, the number of staff of the organisation and its budget are also provided.

Co-operation/partnership fields

Information is provided on the organization's links with other institutions and different communities, as well as on the extent of its membership, and its affiliation to networks.

Major programme fields

Under the headings Young Child Programmes, Family Programmes and Community Programmes, the activities of the organization are listed according to the main foci of its programmes. The target populations for these programmes are also described.

Services & information activities fields

When applicable, details of the services, publications and materials the organization provides are listed, as well as details on the information activities it undertakes.

Information Lists/Bibliographies

The following information lists and bibliographies are included at the end of this publication to help users gain knowledge of potential funders of early childhood activities and of other information sources on early childhood issues in Sub-Saharan Africa:

- UNESCO National Commissions in Sub-Saharan Africa
- United Nations Information Centres in Sub-Saharan Africa
- Organizations/agencies involved in childhood actions in Sub-Saharan Africa
- Selected publications on childhood, family and community issues in Sub-Saharan Africa -
- Selected data bases on childhood, family and community issues

Indexes

The following indexes are included at the end of this publication to assist users in gaining direct access to the information provided:

- an Acronym Index
- an Type of Actions Index
- a Focus of Programmes Index
- an Index of Services Provided
- a Geographical Coverage Index

For example, organisations working on child-to-child projects are identified by profile code in the Type of Actions Index under the heading Child-to-Child. Users can then refer back to the profiles to locate the organisations corresponding to these codes.

In addition, an alphabetical listing of the official names of the organisations included in the Directory is provided, as well as a similar listing arranged by country in which the organization is located.

Acknowledgements

We would like to thank all the organizations who answered the questionnaire for their cooperation in providing the information for this publication. Furthermore the assistance and encouragement of the UNESCO National Commissions and UN agencies field offices in sub-Saharan Africa, the YCFE Scientific Advisory Group, the Consultative Group on Early Childhood Care and Development, the Centre International de l'Enfance, and the Bernard van Leer Foundation is acknowledged with many thanks.

Childhood in Sub-Saharan Africa: challenges and opportunities

Bernard P. Y. Combes

Overview

The problems of sub-Saharan Africa, hereafter referred to as Africa, present a major challenge to the survival of children on the continent. Problems posed by the lack of infrastructure, high unemployment, slow socioeconomic development, high migration due to drought, political instability and environmental degradation, all require long-term actions if Africa is to avoid a further worsening of present conditions. Facing and dealing with these problems at the same time as caring for their children is a difficult balancing act for many nations in the region.

Its population, estimated at 640 million and growing at an average annual rate of 3%, is among the world's least healthy and least educated, earning its livelihood mostly from subsistence farming. Sub-Saharan Africa is made up of 47 countries with diverse social and economic potentials. Among these are some of the poorest countries in the world. Access to basic services (food, health, education, welfare) and the possibilities for socioeconomic development vary greatly from country to country. They also depend on whether the population is urban or rural and on gender.

Hence, many differences exist on the continent, whether at the geographical, historical, cultural, religious, linguistic, economic, rural or urban levels, which prevent the establishment of a generalized "definition" of the situation of the African child. It is often difficult to get a clear picture of the situation, as most figures do not take into account the differences that exist in access, availability and quality of child services from one area to another and from one country to another.

Children in sub-Saharan Africa do not all suffer from hunger; in many cases a lot of their food is produced locally. Nor do children all face survival problems. The under-five mortality rate has decreased by 42% since the 1960s. Children in sub-Saharan Africa are not all illiterate. The enrollment rate in primary schools increased from 32.7% to 65.9% between 1960 and 1985. These figures are relatively low compared to those of industrialized nations, but progress has to be measured in comparison with the past. It has only taken some 30 years for Africa to reach a level in child development and survival that took more than a hundred years for industrialized societies to reach.

Despite the region's considerable problems - the world's highest infant and maternal mortality rate, rapid population growth and a severe lack of trained service providers - there has been progress and in some cases, successful results where countries have enforced series of measures to improve and better primary health care and other services for children. A majority of African governments have adopted policies favorable to child care and development, in part as a result of a growing awareness among political leaders of the serious demographic, socioeconomic and child survival problems that exist on the continent. All African leaders gave their support to the 1990 World Summit for Children. They have furthered the Declaration and Action Plan adopted at the Summit by declaring the 1990s the African Decade for Child Survival, Protection and Development.

African children

The demographic profile of Africa is one dominated by children, with nearly half of the population being under the age of 15 and 19% under the age of five. Half of the total population, therefore, has no vote and no economic power of their own; and the youngest ones are completely dependent and hence the most vulnerable members of the society. If a single age-specific group most affected by the crisis in Africa can be identified it is the children under five years of age. (Dedge, 1989)

Health

The major health care problems faced by African children include diarrhoea, acute respiratory infections, nutritional deficiencies, perinatal diseases, measles, tetanus, malaria and common infections. High levels of illiteracy and ignorance, poor housing and overcrowding, poor sanitation, the lack of safe water supplies and inadequate health care service infrastructures contribute to poor child health conditions.

The improvement of child health requires the control of key diseases through simple and affordable technologies, as well as the following actions: promotion of breast-feeding, provision of adequate safe water, better housing, promotion of health behavior changes through education and expansion of primary health care services, including family planning and child spacing.

Some remarkable achievements have been made, particularly in the field of immunization and oral rehydration. An effort in favour of universal child immunisation has allowed nearly all African countries to instigate immunization programmes against the most common childhood diseases. More than half of the children in Africa have access to health services. More than 80% of children in urban areas and more than 40% of children in rural areas have access to safe water. Nearly 60% of children are immunized against the 6 major childhood diseases (diphtheria, tetanus, whooping cough, tuberculosis, polio myelitis and measles).

Despite these achievements, there remains a fragile balance between health and disease for the African child. Infant mortality rates - over 150 (per thousand live births) in 17 African countries and between 100 and 149 in a further 21 countries - indicate that the situation is still serious (Lemma & Valkonen, 1989) Such problems are also compounded by the AIDS epidemic.

Nutrition/food

Food production is currently a major concern in most sub-Saharan countries, as food production rates constantly lag behind the high population growth rates. Adequate nutrition, both in quantity and quality, and family food security are major survival needs of children in Africa. A quarter of the children under 5 are underweight. The need for breast-feeding and for the continuous availability of appropriate weaning foods must also be stressed.

Achieving these needs is often prevented by widespread poverty and underdevelopment; inadequate agricultural production, infrastructure and access to land; harmful traditional practices; ignorance and poor education; maternal malnutrition; recurrent childhood infections; civil unrest, wars, natural and man-made disasters.

Despite the difficulties, major nutritional constraints are being addressed through activities that focus on agriculture and food production, storage, processing and distribution; strategies for food reserves and security; research into infant feeding and weaning foods and practices, and nutritional education and nutritional surveillance at all levels.

Schooling

In general, African countries have made significant strides in providing schooling for younger children. Parents see education as a vital catalyst for change and believe preschools give children a head start in formal schooling. Social demand for schooling is extremely high and many governments, communities and families are willing to forego other uses of income in order to educate all children.

However, the provision of preschool education is constrained by location (urban or rural areas), lack of resources and funds, and inadequately trained personnel. Other factors also play a role in limiting access to schooling:

race or ethnicity - groups who are disadvantaged in general in a society due to prejudice are also disadvantaged in terms of educational access; religion - norms and values can be used to determine exclusion of some groups from schooling; handicaps - sometimes societies "excuse" children with physical or mental handicaps from school; and children in motion - it is difficult for school systems to supply stable schooling to nomads and refugees as they travel or take up temporary residence. (Anderson, 1989)

Access to preschools thus varies greatly from one area to another, depending on location, level of poverty and gender: children of poorer families are less likely to attend preschool programmes than children of families who are better off; and girls are less likely to be encouraged to go to preschools, in particular in rural areas. In most countries only a small percentage of children have access to preschool services of any kind, and the facilities that do exist are in inverse proportion to the demand and population size. There is a need for curriculum development at national levels, local production of learning materials, the creation and strengthening of day-care facilities, parent education and training for child-to-child activities.

The changing family and child care environment

The large numbers of children reduce the ability of the African family to provide the appropriate social, educational and intellectual environment for the child. This is often compounded further by an unsanitary environment, poor nutrition and inadequate medical care. (Omran, 1987)

Traditional African societies are rooted in the family. This basic unit of society includes the nuclear family - mother, father and children - and the 'greater' extended family. From early childhood, the sense of belonging to a family is established and stimulated in different ways, such as frequent visits to relatives and other members of the same family, undergoing family rituals, or taking part in family festivities. The integration of the child into the tribe is one of the aspects of education the family provides the child.

In traditional societies, child-rearing and socialization processes are handled with care and concern, the mother playing an important role by establishing a warm relationship between herself and the child. She provides the necessary emotional support for the child's start in life. This relationship is later extended to the other members of the family as well, particularly the father, older siblings, uncles, aunts and grandparents. The child's education is thus the responsibility of a great number of people. Children are viewed as a resource to the family and community, as someone to help in the fields or with the livestock, and later to provide care for younger siblings and as a source of old age security for parents. In this context, the child receives affection, care and security during the early years. However, with the rapid socioeconomic changes that have taken place in most countries, particularly after independence, the traditional ways of bringing up children have undergone many changes.

Traditionally, extended family members lived in one village and were able to share the responsibility of looking after children. Evolution of social structures, technological changes and migration to urban areas have loosened the ties of the extended family. While most Africans still live in rural communities, the on-going rural-urban migration has greatly increased the burden placed on the infrastructures and services available in cities which in turn has increased the difficult conditions faced by city children. Another consequence is that children are brought up outside the extended family set-up. Parents, particularly the mother, often carry the sole responsibility of rearing and caring for the children.

Furthermore, in many urban areas, even the concept of the nuclear family is often no longer the norm. Many thousands of single parents must bring up their children by themselves. Most of these single-parent households are headed by mothers. Single-parent families carry a heavy burden, since they must combine childrearing with economic activities - without the traditional support system. In both rural and urban areas, many women are engaged in income-generation activities. This means being away from the home and children for extended periods of time. It has been shown that the constraints of single-parenthood have adverse effects on the development of young children in numerous ways, such as frequent ill health, persistent malnutrition, lack of early stimulation, illiteracy and lack of basic learning skills passed on from parent to child. Also, as more children attend primary school, older siblings are less available to look after their younger brothers and sisters.

The overall result is that parents who cannot afford to pay caregivers and whose children cannot accompany them to the workplace often leave their children in the care of other children who should themselves be in school, or they leave their children to fend for themselves. The number of children forced to survive on their own has greatly increased during the last decade. In most African cities, more and more children live on their own in the streets. In 1991, there were five million street children in Africa, according to UNESCO estimates. These children struggle for daily survival by taking up whatever odd jobs are available, but they also face violence and abuse. Apart from suffering from physical and psychological trauma, these children rarely have a chance to go to school and acquire the skills needed to improve their lives. Unfortunately most governments are still reluctant to assist street children, since they are often not considered in national education or welfare policies.

Many African children suffer from the social disintegration of the family, family instability (separation, divorce, or unwanted pregnancies), and adverse parental behaviour (such as alcoholism) and have found themselves homeless and victims of exploitation and violence. In such situations, the provision of a caring environment quickly disappears.

Everywhere in Africa, the family is the sole structure which provides security; not merely emotional security, but security in terms of survival, and the protection of the weak by the strong. The family cushions the effects of disasters and distributes income between the haves and the have-nots. (Lauras-Lecoh, 1990)

Thus, early childhood care and education that once occurred naturally and without much conscious planning, in small communities of extended families, is now fractured and ill defined in many parts of urban and rural Africa. The effects of famine, civil unrest, wars and AIDS on family life and the community in general are serious and put a further strain on the changing family environment in which African children grow up.

Armed conflicts & civil unrest

Africa hosts the largest population of refugees and displaced persons in the world. Some 40 million Africans are currently 'displaced' by conflicts or environmental disasters. Drought, this year, threatens 27 million people in 14 sub-Saharan countries.

Refugees have been created by a multiplicity of factors. The most immediate causes have been civil, interstate, or anticolonial conflicts; governmental oppression, political upheavals and the persecution of particular political, ethnic or religious groups within states; and environmental disasters such as drought and famine. (Harrell-Bond, Hussein & Matlou, 1989)

Sub-Saharan Africa has been and remains the theatre of long-running wars and frequent civil unrest. The region as a whole has been spending two and half times as much on its military as on its health services. (Grant, 1992) Children's rights are neglected in many parts of Africa. Armies and rebel movements have greatly reduced what little prospects of hope children may have had. Child soldiers are quite common throughout the unstable areas of the continent.

Children are vulnerable not only to direct attacks, but to disruption of food supplies, to being eyewitnesses to the murder of their families, to the break-up of their families, and to displacement and prolonged stays in refugee camps. Boys are turned into combatants, girls are raped or carried off by young soldiers as concubines. Infants are least likely to survive, as malnutrition and attendant diseases affect them 'first and most'. (Jacobs, 1991)

According to UN estimates, in Angola some 500,000 children have died since 1980 either as a direct result of the fighting or from war-related causes, such as malnutrition and disease. In some parts of Angola, more than one out of three children die before they reach the age of five. As many as 50,000 children have been orphaned or separated from their parents. (Speck, 1992) African wars and famines have created a growing refugee and displaced persons problem, in particular in the Horn of Africa and in Southern Africa, a great number of whom are children. For instance, the French NGO Médecins sans Frontières reported that of the 84,000 refugees in one single refugee camp in Ethiopia, 24,000 were children of whom 17,000 were unaccompanied by parents. (Church, 1991)

The majority of Africa's displaced and refugee populations are not in camps, but are, as UNHCR describes them, 'spontaneously settled'. They rely for their survival on the willingness and tolerance of the local people among whom they live to provide them some kind of employment or access to land, and to share the few resources available. For various social services - housing, education, health care, transportation - the refugees and displaced persons depend entirely on their host country's already sparse and inadequate resources. Such conditions further disintegrate the stability of the family and the community environment in which a child can grow up.

And always, the heaviest burden is borne by children - children who miss their one chance to grow normally in mind and body, to be educated and to acquire skills to find a place in society. These many millions of children, physically and mentally scarred by the conflicts of their elders, are part of the generation on which the future must be built. (Grant, 1992)

There are a few signs of hope. In some parts of the Horn of Africa, different warring factions have agreed to 'corridors of peace', through which essential supplies can reach millions of civilians, mostly women and children, trapped in the war zone. This has permitted the delivery of medical and food supplies, the immunization of children and the establishment of emergency water supply and sanitation services. International agencies and national NGOs are advocating and putting more pressure on governments and warring factions to not hold children hostages to political and military targets.

AIDS

AIDS is now a major threat to the health and survival of children in many sub-Saharan countries. In Central and East Africa, one out of ten persons affected by AIDS is a child under five. AIDS is a family disease in Africa. Unlike industrialized countries, where the virus still strives mainly among isolated groups, sub-Saharan Africa has about equal numbers of men and women infected by the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) - the virus which causes AIDS.

Detecting AIDS is rendered difficult, because contrary to adults who when infected by AIDS show easily identifiable symptoms, infected children suffer from common early childhood diseases, such as chronic diarrhoea, fever, loss of appetite and respiratory infections. (ASAFED, 1992)

The result is devastating for children, as AIDS progresses rapidly among children. Nearly half the children, who are HIV carriers, die before they are two and 80% before they are five. More than 900,000 children and infants are already infected by the AIDS virus. Many of these were born with the HIV virus because their mothers were infected. Almost 3 million African women are infected with the AIDS virus. By the end of the 1990s, more than 10 million children under 10 will be orphans because of the death of their parents and some 2 million children will have died of AIDS, according to WHO estimates. (MDM & ASAFED, 1992)

Children orphaned because of AIDS face abandonment, impoverishment and rejection, as people become fearful of those who have been in contact with AIDS. Unless they get the proper care, schooling and guidance, AIDS orphans may follow the path of their parents. Sadly, many AIDS-infected parents or relatives do not live long enough to help their children avoid repeating their own mistakes. Often, grandparents are the only ones left to care for their grandchildren, when they would have relied on their children for support in their old age.

Other factors compound the problems of care for children orphaned by AIDS. For one, the stigma and fear associated with the disease are making many relatives increasingly reluctant to look after children who they suspect may be infected with the virus. For another, many children find they have lost not only their parents but also their rights to parental property and to humane treatment. (Katumba, 1992)

The AIDS epidemic is putting a strain on the already weak health services of sub-Saharan countries. The cost of caring for AIDS patients is high, in addition to the indirect cost to society of the loss of labour and family caretakers. In view of the dangers posed by AIDS in Africa, a number of governmental health services, family planning associations, intergovernmental agencies and NGOs have taken various steps to design and execute effective integrated programmes to disseminate AIDS prevention information, education and counselling to the public.

The key to protecting children from AIDS is the mobilization of health providers and social workers, community and religious leaders, the mass media and the schools, professional associations and non-governmental organisations of many kinds to inform people how they can take responsibility to prevent the spread of HIV infection within their families and communities. (Grant, 1990)

The best way to help children is to save the lives of their parents. Programmes are being aimed at slowing the spread of AIDS among pregnant women, as it is estimated that a quarter of pregnant women who are HIV-carriers transmit it to their infants. Equally important, family planning associations and other NGOs co-operate more and more with national governments and fulfill appropriate roles within the national AIDS programmes of their respective countries.

Governmental & non-governmental involvement

Most Africans have a firm belief that children are the future of their nations and that early childhood care and education contributes to nation building. The organisational means to meet children's needs must be improved if this desire is to be met and requires the development of a more comprehensive view of children, both in terms of their vulnerability and of their potential as individuals and as future participants in social and economic change. (Lemrna & Valkonen, 1989)

Changes in the family structure and in socioeconomic activities often imply changes in values, attitudes and methods of looking after children. These changes force families to look for alternative ways of taking care of their young children. This gap is now often filled by governmental agencies, NGOs, local communities and universities providing the required services.

Support for early childhood programmes comes from a variety of sources. These include: governments, international funders, non-governmental organizations (with a social bias and operating on a non-profit basis), the profit-making private sector, community organizations and programme participants. The resources that each of these can provide are different, and different factors influence the ability of each to make the resources available. The total amount of funding and other resources that are available for programmes of care and development will be the sum of what is provided by all of these sources. (Myers, 1992)

The links between various child welfare services and institutions, and the need for innovative approaches and 'starter' activities are currently acknowledged as necessary elements to prepare a national base for the expansion of services for children. The concern, both at the governmental and non-governmental levels, for proper and adequate early childhood care and education stems from the growing recognition and understanding of the crucial importance in human development of the first six years of life.

Building a positive foundation for the child's future life implies a balanced programme which embraces:

- A pre-school education programme offering through play, maximum opportunity for learning and development on all levels - intellectual, physical, social, spiritual and preparing the child not only for the transition to formal schooling, but indeed for life.
- Proper care in terms of safety, hygiene, health and nutrition, in an environment which provides emotional stability.
- Supervision by adequately trained adults who demonstrate an attitude of caring and understanding for the children in their charge. (SAAECE, 1991)

In many countries, a further step has been taken. Both governmental and non-governmental organizations are providing not only for children but also for parents. This is done by educating parents to understand better how their children grow, develop and learn, and thus improve their parenting skills so as to be better able to help their children.

Governments

On the political front, significant progress has been made in the last few years regarding recognition of the place of early childhood care and education in national development. Governments are reorganising their child care services. Some countries have started developing national policies aimed at standardising early childhood education and care activities. Furthermore, some have managed to shield their children from the effects of severe drought or environmental disasters by setting up monitoring systems in order to help target government actions. Others have managed to prevent increases in child malnutrition by means of specific low-cost policies including primary health care programmes, immunization services, diarrhoeas disease control measures, supplementary feeding programmes, and rural water supplies. However, real commitment to early childhood care and education continues to be hindered by leadership pre-occupation with more visible social and economic development concerns.

Following the decisions of the World Summit for Children, African governments have been preparing National Programmes of Action to meet the goals agreed upon at the Summit. These Programmes of Action include goals such as halving malnutrition, reducing the impact of the most common diseases, bringing clean water to all communities, and ensuring that all children have access to basic education. In the field of early childhood, this means increasing the availability of early childhood services, in particular in rural areas, insuring adequate training of the staff of early childhood centres. Many African leaders now recognize day-care/preschool institutions as an important integral part of a community environment that helps children grow and learn, and as a community service and resource that allows the participation of mothers in the life and work of the community and in national development.

African Charter for the Rights and Well-Being of the Child

African countries were among the first to ratify the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, and they pursued this action by adopting an African Charter on the Rights and the Well-Being of Children. The Charter advocates the same principal goals as those of the UN Declaration but stresses the uniqueness of Africa, its traditions and cultural diversity. The Charter is the first regional document based on the UN Convention.

Through its 48 articles, the Charter recommends:

- to give the child the possibility of being heard in any administrative procedure that involves him/her.
- to guarantee his/her right to a compulsory basic education, to health services and to equality regardless of ethnic, tribal or religious origin or gender.
- to provide disabled children with special care and guarantee their access to services.
- to establish a minimum working age and to protect children against exploitation in the workplace and against any other forms of exploitation.
- to insure that the rulings rendered by courts/tribunals respect the dignity and personal value of the child.
- to protect the family and insure the equality of men and women within the family. - to protect the child against cultural and social practices that are harmful.
- to establish the minimum age of marriage at 18 and to make the recording of marriages compulsory.
- to protect children against recruitment to participate in armed conflicts.

In addition, the Charter also defines the responsibilities of the child towards his family, society and State.

NGOs and communities

Local organizations are emerging, as well as professional organizations, to help governments in their fight against ill health, disease and high infant and child mortality. Universities are beginning to revise their curricula to address the health and child care problems of their countries. Governments have offered financial assistance to communities to either build or upgrade early childhood facilities and services. They have also encouraged and supported the initiatives and innovations of NGOs and other voluntary organizations in providing such services to communities, in particular those in rural areas. Early childhood care and education activities and centres act as a focus for community involvement and development in many fields.

Community developers quickly saw that these centres could be used as a base from which a variety of social services could be offered. They began to offer training to community volunteers, adult education courses in hygiene, disease prevention, water purification, and treatment of such diseases as malaria and conjunctivitis. This provides an excellent example of ways in which a child-care and development centre served as a catalyst and location for more general development activities that help the community at large. (Myers, 1992)

Early childhood care and education programmes thus cover many activities. They include institution-based programmes, such as day care, nursery, preschool and child care centres. They also include educational activities in broader community programmes, such as supplementary feeding, health and nutrition education, support and education of parents, community well-being, mass media programmes and child-to-child activities. Early childhood centres also play an educational role for parents where they can learn about and learn how to encourage the healthy development of their children. The establishment of educational and care centers for young children has often become a community involvement project.

Usually, individuals (mainly mothers) get together and decide to establish a learning center for their children who are not yet in formal schools. They identify the land on which it is to be built and start gathering building materials. With the support of others in the community, they complete the construction of the centre and then appoint one of their members (who has been at least to primary school) to be the teacher. They also decide on a salary for the teacher and on how monies for the salary should be collected. In urban areas, individual entrepreneurs often establish the preprimary institutions. (Olmsted & Weikart, 1989)

Without the partnership of parents and communities, efforts to improve early childhood care and education would be unlikely to be effective. The involvement of communities and individuals in various stages and areas of early childhood care programmes and services, in-kind contributions from governmental agencies and other NGOs and the extensive participation of parents and volunteers can ensure that services may be within the reach of young children, and could enhance the long-term sustainability of early childhood care in Africa. However, as the number of preschool institutions increases and as different philosophies, personnel and financial resources run these centres, quantity should not replace quality.

Early childhood education has become a prosperous burgeoning business. As with many businesses and industries that develop 'overnight' in rapidly changing societies, the preschool business has mushroomed with little regard for rules and regulations and even less theoretical and practical know-how. (Akinsanya, 1984)

To combat this lack of standards, national umbrella bodies have emerged in many sub-Saharan countries, regrouping individuals and institutions concerned with early childhood care and education. These associations provide the opportunity for all those concerned with the welfare of young children to interact, share knowledge and speak with one voice at a national or regional level. In some cases, these networks serve as intermediaries between governmental agencies concerned with young children and the multitude of preschool actors and practitioners. The networks help the different actors to work together to establish and enforce standards of preschool education and care in order to insure equal provision and access to quality services for young children across the continent.

Early childhood in sub-Saharan Africa: what future?

The present changing scene should not however be opposed to past stability or social immobility. Africa has been faced with subsistence crises, clashes with other cultures, and population disasters, now in one region, now in another, for centuries. History is quickening its pace; no African society is sheltered from change or the influence of other cultures; and since families are still central to the fabric of society, they are in the front line of the changes now taking place. (Lauras-Lecoh, 1990)

The economic problems facing African countries have increased the difficulties of undertaking early childhood activities which require material and financial resources (trained personnel, equipment and supplies). However, despite these increased difficulties, the situation of African children has improved as access to three basic services is improved: immunization, safe drinking water and sanitation, and early childhood care and education, as well as where political will to tackle the problems of children is strengthened and partnership between governmental and non-governmental actors is furthered.

In the long run, the continuous and sustained improvement of child survival and development depends on community participation and responsibility, as well as on certain support services from government and other concerned sources outside the community. Contrary to popular belief, however, affordable techniques and know-how are presently more widely available than is the capacity for their promotion, organisation, management and application in a community context. (Lemma & Valkonen, 1989)

The challenges of the 1990s are many. Promoting and facilitating the expansion, availability and quality of child services will continue to call on the creativity and imagination of planners and practitioners, requiring the support of all - governments, NGOs, universities, local communities, families and parents - to reach the greatest number of children possible. Crucial in this matter will be the extent to which programmes, projects and services can be designed and directed to enhance their acceptability, within the varied and diverse cultural, religious and other social contexts in Africa.

The increasingly positive shifts in government policies towards young children, the fast growing number of NGOs, institutions and local communities able to provide services to children and the increasing amount of inter-organizational collaboration and networking are only a few of the opportunities waiting to be created, explored or furthered in the 1990s for the maximum benefit of children in Africa.

Early childhood care and education in Sub-Saharan Africa: survey findings

Joanne Furman Combes

The responsibility of caring for and assisting children, their families and communities in sub-Saharan Africa is shared by a variety of non-governmental and governmental organizations. Each of these organizations plays an important role in using the available resources to meet the health, welfare and educational needs of children and their families.

This survey of organizations working in the field of early childhood care and education in sub-Saharan Africa elicited responses from 240 organisations. Their answers to the Questionnaire (a copy of which is included with the Directory) provide examples of many of the issues raised in the article, Childhood in Sub-Saharan Africa: Challenges and Opportunities, and offer a more detailed overview of their goals and actions. These organizations recognize that their actions need to involve not only children but also parents, families and communities in order to create an appropriate environment for the healthy development of children.

The survey highlights their activities in the following three programme areas: the Young Child, the Family and the Community. While some of the organisations focus on only one of these areas, most undertake activities in all three. Experience has shown that activities, which attend to needs in the three areas, obtain more holistic and long-lasting results. Each of the organisations included in this Directory has its own approach to meeting the needs of the child, its family and community in sub-Saharan Africa. Their combined efforts work to improve the well-being of the child within its family and community. Whatever their approach, the organisations recognize that children require the following basic services:

- Health care: primary health care for pregnant and nursing mothers and children, health education and disease control.
- Safe, clean water supplies: safe clean water for drinking, cooking and bathing prevents the spread of diseases caused by lack of sanitation.
- Nutrition: enough food prevents malnutrition and aids physical and mental growth.
- Education: early childhood education, primary, secondary and out-of-school learning provide literacy and enrich children's learning experiences.
- Welfare services: half and full-day early childhood centres, youth organisations, parents-teachers' associations, self-help and income-generating projects improve community, family and children's well-being.

Provision of these basic services are essential to ensure a fair start for children. This summary of responses highlights issues that are of major concern to individuals and organizations working in this field in sub-Saharan Africa by demonstrating the 'Who, For Whom, What, How and With Whom' of their actions.

Who? The organizations

Of the 240 organizations in the Directory, approximately 60% are non-governmental, non-profit organizations. Some of these are local community groups, others are national social welfare organizations. Also included in this category are religious organizations, professional associations and organizations providing medical assistance or family planning services.

The remaining 40% includes United Nations agencies' field offices, research institutes, universities, Ministries and governmental agencies. The findings indicate that a wide variety of organisations are responsible for current actions in the field of the young child and the family environment in sub-Saharan Africa.

For whom? The beneficiaries

The responses also help to understand for whom the activities are undertaken. There seems to be an equal interest in activities focusing on the three main programme areas: the Young Child, the Family and the Community. More specifically, those organisations which work with young children work more with children aged four to six than with two to three year olds or with infants. This confirms the observations of the East and Central African Focus Group on Early Childhood Care and Education which noted "a general trend in the sub-region for children especially within the ages 3-6 years to receive more attention than those below the age of 3 years." (Onyango, 1991)

Responses also show a tendency to focus more on children in rural settings (50%) than on children in urban settings (47%). Girls and boys receive equal attention. One third of the organisations which assist children target their activities on policymakers, professionals and paraprofessionals .

When looking at the responses of organizations working with families, families in rural settings receive slightly more attention (51 %) than those in urban settings (47%). 48% of the organisations focus their family-oriented activities on women, while only 35 % target men. Furthermore, a third of the organisations provide assistance to parents of children with disabilities.

Looking at community actions, 53% of the organisations work with rural communities and 49% with urban communities. Thus in all three sectors of activities, the rural setting is more favoured than the urban setting by a small, but consistent percentage. Over 40% of the organizations focus on specific groups involved with children such as community leaders and youth, while approximately 20% work with refugees and minorities.

What? The actions

Respondents provided information on the focus of their actions within their Young Child, Family and Community programmes. The work of the organisations in relation to the child was divided into four main areas: child health and development, child care and education, child at risk, and child advocacy. Their activities relating to the family were divided into three main areas: family health and welfare, family education and awareness, and families at risk. Their actions concerned with the community were divided into three main areas: community welfare and involvement, community development and awareness, and community advocacy.

Each of these main areas was chosen by over 50% of the organizations. Child health and development was selected by 96% of the respondents, family education and awareness by 87%, and community development and awareness by 86 % . It is interesting to note that more organizations work to promote child health and development (96%) than child care and education (84%), while the opposite is apparent for the family and the community. Actions for family education and awareness (87%) and community development and awareness (86%) are slightly higher than those for family health and welfare (83%) and community welfare and involvement (84%). In addition, the organizations also assist children (60%) and families (55%) at risk, and undertake advocacy for the community (63%) and for children (58%).

Young Child Programmes

Those organisations working in the Child Health and Development sector seem to give equal attention to the child development activities as to health and nutrition activities. The wide range of actions demonstrates the many and varied needs of children in the region. The two activities (AIDS and mental health) chosen the least often are nevertheless attended to by over a quarter of the organisations.

In the Child Care and Education sector, there are again a wide range of activities, each attended to by between one fifth and one half of the organisations. Preschool education, that is educating and caring for children above the age of 3, is covered by 50% of the organizations, while infant care falls in the realm of activities of 46%. More organizations provide home-based programmes (40%) or non-formal centre-based programmes (36%) than formal childcare centres (32%). A smaller number provide special education (25%) or foster care (23%). In this sector, the division between care and education is a very fine one, depending on the age of the children and the attitudes that caregivers, educators and parents have about the role of education in the development of the child between 0 and 6.

Between 15% and 37% of the organizations work in the Child at Risk sector. This sector can be divided into three categories: activities for children with developmental/health difficulties, those for children abused by others, and activities for children in difficult situations. Children with special needs (36%) and developmental difficulties (28%) fall in the first category, child abuse/neglect (37%) and child prostitution (19%) in the second, and care for street children (29%), orphans (27%) and refugee children (20%) in the third. A quarter of the organizations work with children who have AIDS.

The final sector of activities specifically dealing with children, Child Advocacy, was attended to by between 27% and 46% of the organisations. One third work to advocate the UN Convention on the Child, while 27% work in their own countries to promote child legislation.

Family Programmes

Between 27% and 68% of the organizations work in the Family Health and Welfare sector. Most of the actions indicated include both health and welfare components. Of primary importance is the welfare of the mother and infant (68%), while the well-being of the whole family through primary health care is attended to by 52%. Family planning assistance is provided by half of the organizations, while teenage pregnancy and AIDS/transmittable diseases are attended to by just over one third.

When working in the Family Education and Awareness sector, over three quarters of the organizations provide education for parents/caregivers, while over half work specifically in the field of health education. Most of the organizations focus more on parent/caregiver education (78%) than on parent-to-be education (28%) or on the father's role (29%). Finally, it is clear from the responses that these organisations see their role more in providing education related to the child than in providing general education, such as literacy courses (28%).

In the Family at Risk sector, poverty is the concern of the most organizations (39%), followed by teenage parents (32%) and single-parent families (31%). Parents with disabilities/AIDS are the focus of 25% of the organizations, while refugee, minority and migrant families are assisted by under one quarter of the organizations.

Community Programmes

Between 22% and 53% of the organizations work in the Community Welfare and Involvement sector. Social services (53%), health services (49%) and social welfare (42%) were chosen most often. Home visits, youth programmes and voluntary services are undertaken by slightly more than a third of the organisations.

Community-based preschool/care (30%) and formal preschool care (27%) are provided by more organisations than parent-based preschool care or workplace childcare (both 22%).

Between 23% and 56% of the organisations work in the Community Development and Awareness sector. In general, responses indicate that more focus is placed on social welfare and social mobilization than on physical and economic improvements for the community as a whole: awareness raising (56%) and sociocultural environment (50%) versus water and environmental sanitation (38%), income-generating activities (34%), and physical upgrading (23%).

The responses related to the Community Advocacy sector indicate that the organisations' first priority are the rights (47%) and protection (38%) of children. Approximately one third of the organizations promote general health policy (34%) and population policy (32%), whereas human rights (29%) and family legislation (23%) are less often targeted.

How? The means

The Questionnaire also solicited information on services provided by the organisations, their funding sources, annual budget and information sources. These responses provide a clearer picture of the organisations working with children, families and communities.

The services provided range from documentation/information activities (77 %) to counselling/guidance services (38%) and legal services (18%). The range of services provided reflects the variety of clients who depend on such activities, from individuals working with young children, to NGOs, governments, research institutes and other welfare organizations.

Only 153 organisations responded to the question on funding sources. Such sources range from national governments (50%) and foreign aid programmes (44%) to NGOs (26%) and financial institutions (5%). Fundraising activities (34%) and funds received from private donations (25%) are also significant sources, while self-financing activities, such as consulting fees (9%) and publications (5%) are limited sources of funding. Responses thus indicate that the need for funding requires some resourcefulness in accessing a variety of funding sources.

As only 115 organisations responded to the question on the organization's budget, it is not possible to indicate exactly how much is available for early childhood care and education activities and related services in sub-Saharan Africa. The total sum of annual budgets indicated is US$ 64,477,820. While the actual figure for each organisation varies greatly, the approximate average figure of US$ 578,000 per organisation represents a considerable amount, when comparing it with the per capita GNP of most sub-Saharan African countries.

Over three quarters of the organizations obtain information for their work from governmental agencies, national/local and international NGOs. UN agencies provide information to 67% of the organizations, while foundations are information sources for 25%. Between 30% and 67% of the organizations seek more specialized information from a range of other organisations, such as research institutes, hospitals, women's groups and parents' groups.

With whom? The partners

When undertaking their activities, many organizations recognize the benefits of working with partners to reach the goals identified. UN agencies are the partners of the largest number of organisations (67%), followed closely by national and local NGOs (64%). International NGOs and government agencies are called upon by over 50% of the organisations, while foundations and trade unions are the partners of under 25%. A range of other organisations (such as women's groups, parents' groups and professional associations) were also identified as partners by between 25% and 50% of the organisations.

Complementary approaches

The results of this survey illustrate the complementary nature of the approaches and actions of organizations in the field of early childhood care, development and education. The activities of the organisations included in this Directory clearly emphasize the interdependence between actions aimed at children, those focusing on the family and those concerned with the community. These actions take into account the physical, intellectual, sociocultural and economic aspects of the environment the child lives in; thus involving aspects that not only concern the child itself, but also his immediate family and his community.

From this survey, it is apparent that topics which have captured the attention of organizations working in sub-Saharan Africa in the last decades, such as family planning child immunisation, mother and infant welfare or preschool education, are still of great importance. In addition, this survey also shows that such organisations have been able to respond rapidly to emerging critical issues, such as AIDS and children's rights.

It is only by comparing these results with those of future studies that it will be possible to better understand the vital role, contributions and achievements of these varied organisations in actions in favour of the young child, the family and the community.

INFORMATION LISTS

UNESCO National Commissions in Sub-Saharan Africa

UNESCO National Commissions fulfil several roles. They serve as advisory organs for their respective countries, assisting in preparations for and participation in UNESCO meetings and conferences, in the elaboration of government positions concerning UNESCO programmes and in the evaluation of such programmes, and in national projects contributing to the implementation of UNESCO programmes.

The Commissions are organs of liaison with other governmental authorities, universities and research institutions, national branches of NGOs, national professional associations, trade unions, women and youth organizations and individual experts. They serve as executive bodies participating in UNESCO country projects and in national programmes, activities and studies.

The Commissions are also information organs. In this role they may issue regular bulletins and other publications, translate UNESCO publications into local languages, organize seminars, meetings, exhibitions and other events, co-operate with the press, radio and television in their respective countries, and use various other means to inform the general and specialized public of UNESCO's aims and activities, and of related national activities.

United Nations Information Centres in Sub-Saharan Africa

The UN Department of Public Information regularly provides all its Information Centres with press releases and news-oriented information kits, periodicals and books published by the Department and some of the specialized Agencies. These include Development Forum, Africa Recovery, the UN Chronicle and the Yearbook of the United Nations. Statistical publications are available at the Centres for reference only. Some of the Centres also produce their own newspapers.

All Information Centres are official depository libraries of the UN and receive major official UN documents, including summary and verbatim records of all UN meetings, special reports and studies prepared by substantive departments of the UN Secretariat. They also stock United Nations posters, wallsheets, and black and white photographs. From time to time, Centres can provide speakers on UN activities for special NGO programmes.

ANNEXES

The Convention on the Rights of the Child

The Convention on the Rights of the Child was adopted by the United Nations on November 20th 1989 and entered into force on September 2nd 1990 after being ratified by 20 States. As of June 30th 1992, 148 countries had either signed the Convention or become States Parties to it by ratification or accession. When ratified by a State, the Convention becomes binding law in it.

The Convention seeks to balance the rights of the child with the rights and duties of parents or others who have responsibilities for child survival, development and protection, and gives the child the right to participate in decisions affecting both the present and the future. The fifty-four articles of the Convention describe the individual rights of any person under 18 to develop his or her full potential, free from hunger and want, neglect, exploitation or other abuses.

The inherent strength of the new Convention lies in its flexibility, its capacity to accommodate the many different approaches of nations in pursuit of a common goal. It has not evaded the sensitive issues, but has found means to adjust to the different cultural, religious and other values which address universal child needs in their own ways.

Main provisions of the Convention

Preamble

The preamble reaffirms the fact that children because of their vulnerability, need special care and protection, and places special emphasis on the primary caring and protective responsibility of the family. It also reaffirms the need for legal and other protection of the child before and after birth, the importance of respect for the cultural values of the child's community, and the vital role of international co-operation in securing children's rights.

Definition of a child (article 1) A child is recognized as a person under 18, unless national laws recognize the age of majority earlier.

Non-discrimination (article 2)

All rights apply to all children without exception. It is the State's obligation to protect children from any form of discrimination and to take positive action to promote their rights.

Best interests of the child (article 3)

All actions concerning the child shall take full account of his or her best interests. The State shall provide the child with adequate care when parents, or others charged with that responsibility, fail to do so.

Implementation of rights (article 4) The State must do all it can to implement the rights contained in the Convention.

Parental guidance and the child's evolving capacities (article 5)

The State must respect the rights and responsibilities of parents and the extended family to provide guidance for the child which is appropriate to her or his evolving capacities.

Survival and development (article 6)

Every child has the inherent right to life, and the State has an obligation to ensure the child's survival and development.

Name and nationality (article 7)

The child has the right to a name at birth. The child has also the right to acquire a nationality and, as far as possible, to know his or her parents and be cared for by them.

Preservation of identity (article 8)

The State has an obligation to protect, and if necessary re-establish, basic aspects of the child's identity (including name, nationality and family ties).

Separation from parents (article 9)

The child has a right to live with his or her parents unless this is deemed incompatible with the child's best interests. The child also has the right to maintain contacts with both parents if separated from one or both.

Family reunification (article 10)

Children and their parents have the right to leave any country and to enter their own for purposes of reunion or the maintenance of the child-parent relationship.

Illicit transfer and non-return (article 11)

The State has an obligation to prevent and remedy the kidnapping or retention of children abroad by a parent or third party.

The child's opinion (article 12)

The child has the right to express his or her opinion freely and to have that opinion taken into account in any matter or procedure affecting the child.

Freedom of expression (article 13)

The child has the right to express his or her views, obtain information, make ideas or information known, regardless of frontiers.

Freedom of thought, conscience and religion (article 14)

The State shall respect the child's right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, subject to appropriate parental guidance.

Freedom of association (article 15) Children have a right to meet with others, and to join or form associations.

Protection of privacy (article 16)

Children have the right to protection from interference with their privacy, family, home and correspondence, and from libel or slander.

Access to appropriate information (article 17)

The State shall ensure that information and materials from a diversity of sources is accessible to children, and it shall encourage the mass media to disseminate information which is of social and cultural benefit to the child, and take steps to protect him or her from harmful materials.

Parental responsibilities (article 18)

Parents have the joint primary responsibility for raising the child, and the State shall support them in this. The State shall provide appropriate assistance to parents in child-raising.

Protection from abuse and neglect (article 19)

The State shall protect the child from all forms of maltreatment by parents or others responsible for the care of the child and establish appropriate social programmes for the prevention of abuse and the treatment of victims.

Protection of a child without family (article 20)

The State is obliged to provide special protection for a child deprived of a family environment and to ensure that appropriate alternative family care or institutional placement is available in such cases. Efforts to meet this obligation shall pay due regard to the child's cultural background.

Adoption (article 21)

In countries where adoption is recognized and/or allowed, it shall only be carried out in the best interests of the child, and then only with the authorization of competent authorities, and with safeguards for the child.

Refugee children (article 22)

Special protection shall be granted to a refugee child or to a child seeking refugee status. It is the State's obligation to co-operate with competent organizations which provide such protection and assistance.

Disabled children (article 23)

A disabled child has the right to special care, education and training to help him or her enjoy a full and decent life in dignity and achieve the greatest degree of self-reliance and social integration possible.

Health and health services (article 24)

The child has a right to the highest standard of health and medical care attainable. States shall place special emphasis on the provision of primary and preventive health care, public health education and the reduction of infant mortality. They shall encourage international co-operation in this regard and strive to see that no child is deprived of access to effective health services.

Periodic review of placement (article 25)

A child placed by the State for reasons of care, protection or treatment is entitled to have that placement evaluated regularly.

Social security (article 26) The child has the right to benefit from social security including social insurance.

Standard of living (article 27)

Every child has the right to a standard of living adequate for his or her physical, mental, spiritual, moral and social development. Parents have the primary responsibility to ensure that this responsibility can be fulfilled, and is. State responsibility can include material assistance to parents and their children.

Education (article 28)

The child has a right to education, and the State's duty is to ensure that primary education is free and compulsory, to encourage different forms of secondary education accessible to every child and to make higher education available to all on the basis of capacity. School discipline shall be consistent with the child's rights and dignity. The State shall engage in international co-operation to implement this right.

Aims of education (article 29)

Education shall aim at developing the child's personality, talents and mental and physical abilities to the fullest extent. Education shall prepare the child for an active adult life in a free society and foster respect for the child's parents, his or her own cultural identity, language and values, and for the cultural background and values of others.

Children of minorities or indigenous populations (article 30)

Children of minority communities and indigenous populations have the right to enjoy their own culture and to practise their own religion and language.

Leisure, recreation and cultural activities (article 31)

The child has the right to leisure, play and participation in cultural and artistic activities.

Child labour (article 32)

The child has the right to be protected from work that threatens his or her health, education or development. The State shall set minimum ages for employment and regulate working conditions.

Drug abuse (article 33)

Children have the right to protection from the use of narcotic and psychotropic drugs, and from being involved in their production or distribution,

Sexual exploitation (article 34)

The State shall protect children from sexual exploitation and abuse, including prostitution and involvement in pornography.

Sale, trafficking and abduction (article 35)

It is the State's obligation to make every effort to prevent the sale, trafficking and abduction of children.

Other forms of exploitation (article 36)

The child has the right to protection from all forms of exploitation prejudicial to any aspects of the child's welfare not covered in articles 32, 33, 34 and 35.

Torture and deprivation of liberty (article 37)

No child shall be subjected to torture, cruel treatment or punishment, unlawful arrest or deprivation of liberty. Both capital punishment and life imprisonment without the possibility of release are prohibited for offences committed by persons below 18 years. A child who is detained shall have legal and other assistance as well as contact with his or her family.

Armed conflicts (article 38)

State Parties shall take all feasible measures to ensure that children under 15 play no direct part in hostilities. No child below 15 shall be recruited into the armed forces. States shall also ensure the protection and care of children affected by armed conflict as described in relevant international law.

Rehabilitative care (article 39)

The State has an obligation to ensure that child victims of armed conflicts, torture, neglect, maltreatment or exploitation receive appropriate treatment for their recovery and social reintegration.

Administration of juvenile justice (article 40)

A child in conflict with the law has the right to treatment which promotes the child's sense of dignity and worth, takes the child's age into account and aims at his or her reintegration into society. The child is entitled to basic guarantees as well as legal or other assistance for his or her defence.

Respect for higher standards (article 41)

Wherever standards set in applicable national and international law relevant to the rights of the child are higher than those in the Convention, the higher standards shall always apply.

Implementation and entry into force (articles 42 to 54) The provisions of these articles notably foresee:

- the State's obligation to make the rights contained in the Convention widely known to both adults and children.
- the setting up of a Committee on the Rights of the Child composed of ten experts, which will consider reports that State Parties to the Convention are to submit two years after ratification and every five years thereafter.
- States Parties are to make their reports widely available to the general public.
- The Committee may propose that special studies be undertaken on specific issues relating to the rights of the child, and may make its evaluations known to each State Party concerned as well as to the UN General Assembly.
- To foster the effective implementation of the Convention and to encourage international co-operation, the specialized agencies of the United Nations will be able to attend the meetings of the Committee. Together with any other body recognized as "competent", including NGOs in consultative status with UN agencies, they can submit pertinent information to the Committee and be asked to advise on the optimal implementation of the Convention.

Statistical tables: explanatory note

The data in these tables was obtained from the 1990 Statistical Wall Chart on Children: Early Child Development and Learning Achievement, prepared by the Statistical Office of the United Nations Department of International Economic and Social Affairs in collaboration with UNICEF, UNESCO and WHO.

The Young Child

The status of young children is reported in terms of the infant mortality rate and the percentage who are underweight. Infant mortality not only indicates the probability of a child surviving to the age of one, but also more generally reflects the risk of survivors falling ill. The percentage underweight reflects the level of malnutrition, which not only slows physical growth, but also retards psycho-social development of the child. With regard to schooling, the World Conference on Education for All strongly advocated that all countries set targets for the 1990s in terms of the learning achievements of children. Measures of enrolment in primary school are used as interim indicators of learning achievement.

Children under 5: Total number of children, both boys and girls, who have not reached their fifth birthday.

Infant Mortality Rate: Number of infant deaths under one year of age per 1000 live births.

Children under 5 underweight: Moderately and severely underweight children, i.e., those below minus two standard deviations from median weight for age of reference populations.

School enrolment ratio: Total number of enrolled children aged 6 to 11 as a percentage of the total population aged 6 to 11.

The Family

The family's impact on a young child is illustrated in terms of total fertility and illiteracy of females. High fertility generally reflects closely spaced births, which in the context of low income, leads to the exhaustion of mothers and the division of their limited time and resources among many children. Female literacy has a major bearing not only on psychosocial development, but also on the provision of appropriate health and nutrition support to the young child.

Female illiteracy: Percentage of the female population aged 15 and over who cannot read and write.

Total Fertility Rate: Total number of children who would be borne by a woman, if she were to live to the end of her child-bearing years, conforming to the existing fertility pattern of the country.

The Community

Access to health services and Gross National Product (GNP) generally indicate the community support available. Health services provide direct support for the young child, such as vaccinations and medicines, as well as support and advice for the family. GNP is a broad measure of the economic situation of a country and reflects the likely existence of community infrastructures including schools and roads.

Current GNP per capita $US 1988: Estimated at current market prices in US dollars.

Access to local health care: Coverage by local health care within one hour's walk or travel,

The Directory of Early Childhood Care and Education Organizations in Sub-Saharan Africa is based on a survey of 241 organizations, representing a wide range of institutions, both non-governmental and governmental, involved in early childhood care, development and education. It aims to provide those working with and for children with a useful information source, and to encourage and facilitate communication and information sharing between institutions and individuals active in improving the situation of children worldwide. Through its publication, UNESCO offers a creative solution to the problem of information exchange on child issues, and gives a just insight into the national, regional and international contributions to early childhood care and education activities in Sub-Saharan Africa.

The Directory describes 241 organizations based in 40 Sub-Saharan African countries. It contains both analytical and descriptive sections. Articles give an overview of the situation of children and their families in Sub-Saharan Africa and provide an insight into the early childhood care and education efforts and strategies of organizations in the region. The organization profiles provide descriptions of the major activities within the Young Child, Family and Community programmes of the organizations. Pertinent data on agencies and organizations involved in Sub-Saharan Africa and on various information sources on child issues is also provided. Finally, several indexes are included to facilitate information retrieval.
